The Antalya Golden Orange Film Festival is one of the most well-known festivals in Europe and Asia, and one of the oldest and longest running film festivals in Turkey.

The concerts and plays which started to be organized at the historical Aspendos Amphitheatre in the mid-1950s constitute the keystone of the Antalya Golden Orange Film Festival. Great attention was paid by the public to these spectacles, which were held during the summer months every year. They became a tradition and continued in a lively atmosphere until the beginning of the 1960s. The late Dr. Avni Tolunay, who also served as a mayor of Antalya, introduced film showings, turning it into the Antalya Golden Orange Film Festival.

The main aim of the festival was determined as being “to support the sector of Turkish cinema in material and moral terms, to allow Turkish cinema to be opened to the international platform by encouraging Turkish film producers to make good quality movies”.

The international jury of the festival is formed of nine celebrities from the world of cinema and art. These nine jury members must not be directly associated with a production or have financial links with a film in the competition. In addition, there is a jury of seven cinema experts to advise the jury in all three film categories.

The Golden Orange Feature Film Award was soon called the Turkish Oscar following the enthusiasm created in the world of cinema. The festival celebrated its 50th anniversary in October 2013.
